Setting Up Your Aeon Account

Aeon is web-based software that allows researchers to request materials in Special Collections and Denison Library. In order to use Aeon, researchers must first create an individual account. Using that account they can make requests to consult materials from the collections in the reading room or to request digital copies of those materials.

1. On the Claremont Colleges Library home page (libraries.claremont.edu), click on Special Collections in the left side menu. That will take you to the Special Collections home page.
2. On the Special Collections home page, click on “Register as a reader...” to go to the Aeon login page.

3. Since you don’t already have an Aeon account, click on “Learn more and register” to begin creating your Aeon account.
4. The next page will give you lots of information about Aeon—how you can use your account, suggestions for creating username and password, and some copyright information.

At the bottom of the page, click “Accept Terms and Conditions.”
5. Finally! You're ready to provide the information necessary to create your account. Make sure that you fill in all the information that's required—those sections marked with a red asterisk *.

5. Click “Submit Information” and you've created your account.

IMPORTANT: To request materials, please use the “Requesting Items from Special Collections” tab in this guide to learn how to request materials using the library search, the Claremont Colleges Digital Library (CCDL), and the Online Archive of California (OAC). Requesting materials directly using those search engines provides Special Collections staff with the best and most complete information in order to quickly find and retrieve the items you have requested.
